BUCKS COUNTY DOCTORS OBJECT TO INTRUSION

Object to Philadelphia Tuberculosis Society Sending Physician Here

UNETHICAL IS THE CLAIM

QUAKERTOWN, Oct. 15.—In session at the Quakertown Community Hospital Wednesday, the Bucks County Medical Society, in addition to receiving two applications for membership, took action on a matter which the physicians declared to be a breach of professional ethics of the medical profession.

It has come to the knowledge of the society that the Tuberculosis Society of Philadelphia has sent a Philadelphia physician into the county to examine, diagnose and place in the care of nurses such tuberculosis cases as the imported physician can find.

It was declared by resolution after a discussion, that the Bucks County Medical Society has a membership of 68 fully qualified physicians who are more than willing, if just and right, to treat all charity cases without charge. The members of the society regard the procedure of the imported physician as an intrusion upon their rights, a reflection upon their intelligence and a breach of medical etiquette.

ICEBERGS FLOATING ON BERG LAKE IN CANADIAN ROCKIES FURNISH UNUSUAL SCENE; HULMEVILLE MAN TELLS OF THE BAGGING OF A GRIZZLY BEAR

Cyrus E. Smith Gives Vivid Description of Stalking of the Prized Game — Second Shot Made Its Mark in Animal Weighing Nearly 400 Pounds

The second installment of the account of his recent hunting trip in British Columbia is herewith set forth by Cyrus E. Smith, Hulmeville:

Between the continual rain and snow, and steep climb to the game, and the thick underbrush, we gave up (four days thrown away). So we saw fit to return to the ranch house to make a new start, out in another direction. So after our return to the Carr ranch house, and one day lay-off there to get ready we left on September 7th. Our trail was a four-day horse-back ride to the summits, to new hunting grounds, by way of the Upper Fraser River valley, thence up the Grand Forks River to Berg Lake. This lake is only about 5,500 feet elevation, yet on the hottest days in summer you can always see icebergs floating upon its surface. Then looking across to its far shores at the foot of Mt. Robson one can always see hundreds of thousands of tons of ice glaciers, extending from the lake shores to the top of Mt. Robson, still 7,487 ft. farther up. Although this lake is only of 5,500 feet altitude, yet from the fact of its close proximity to icebergs and glaciers it is more raw and cold there than it is at the top of the summit, an altitude of 9,000 to 9,900 feet, and our destination.

And then again we go on through the valley of the thousand waterfalls. This ride of about four hours by horse-back through the valley takes us past Emperor Falls, one of the grandest sights one could wish to see, gorgeous to look upon. Sometimes we are passing through a flat valley with rocky walls and ledges extending up on each side for thousands of feet; with mountain streams and torrential falls almost straight down a sheer drop of thousands of feet, taken up by a river winding over a rocky bed down the valley. Then here and there a winding mountain trail leading up and up and around the gorgeous Emperor Falls in the distance. Beauty everywhere!

Our first night's camp was on an open flat bordered by Jack pines on the banks of the Upper Fraser; and our second night's camp was on a clearing near a group of firs at the source of the Big Smoky River at Adolphus Lake. Here the Big Smoky is only a baby that one could jump across, but farther beyond in the mountainous sheep country after it has been fed by numerous streams and glaciers it becomes wide, swift and deep, as yours truly has cause to know by a former experience.

So many wonderful scenes does one pass through that the selection of scenes he thinks best for the movie camera is difficult.

Our third night's camp we had to pitch in the mid-afternoon at the base of Bess Mountain—a little early to stop, but we had reached the ford over Bess River where we had to cross, and which was swift, deep and swollen from the fact of the hot sun melting the glaciers and feeding the stream in the middle of the day. By waiting until morning to cross the river would have been a disaster.

A marble date stone reading, "Founded 1832" formerly over the entrance doorway but covered by the wooden tower in 1855 and recovered in 1904 by the present brick tower has again been placed over the entrance door. Above this also has been restored the old colonial fan louvre which was built upon this stone when the church was first erected.

New three-paneled doors with brass locks have been hung to conform with the colonial lines. These doorway restorations have been made by Mrs. J. Herman Barnsley as a memorial to her late husband.

Another handsome improvement to the church was the building of a new sacristy by Mrs. Harry M. Crookshank and children, of London, England, as a memorial to her father, Major Sam.

"SHOW BOAT" ORDERED TO LEAVE BURLINGTON

Mayor Rules City Has Plenty of Amusement Places Without Any More

CAPTAIN UNDER ARREST

BURLINGTON, Oct. 15.—The owner of the "world's only Million Dollar Showboat," said Burlington City a fine of $22.50 and costs last night on charges of operating a place of amusement without a license.

The captain of the boat, Andrew Leyard, appeared before Police Judge J. Leedom Smith in city hall and paid the fine after hearing on charges preferred by city police. Mayor Harold V. Holmes had refused the captain's request for permission to have dancing and other amusements on the "showboat," contending that "there are enough amusement places in Burlington now, and all are having a hard time to meet expenses."

Captain Leyard's boat is tied up to the Witherow wharf, at the foot of Stacy street. The boat exhibits curios collected from all parts of the world.

The "Joy Boat" is an old World War transport which Leyard bought some years ago and converted into a show boat. It was docked throughout the Summer at Palmyra and recently was brought to this city, where the skipper planned to open it for dances and other amusement.

Mayor Holmes, however, refused to grant him an amusement license on the ground that the show boat would take too much money from the city. When Leyard was arrested for violating the licensing ordinance he declared the mayor had no jurisdiction over the river front and planned to fight the case, but apparently has changed his mind.

ST. LUKE'S, NEWTOWN, HAS AN ANNIVERSARY

Exercises to Commemorate 100th Anniversary Next Week

PEWS ORIGINAL ONES

NEWTOWN, Oct. 15.—Members of St. Luke's P. E. Church, at Newtown, will celebrate the 100th anniversary of the founding of their church next week.

The exercises in commemoration of this event, under the direction of the rector, Rev. Amos Goddard, will start tomorrow at 11 a. m., with a confirmation service, the Right Reverend Francis M. Taitt, D. D., Bishop of this Diocese, officiating.

Tuesday is St. Luke's Day and marks the main observance of the founding of this hundred-year-old parish. During the day there will be celebration of the Holy Communion at 7:30 and 10:30 a. m., followed by a children's service, after which the rector will unveil an enlarged framed photograph of the late Horace G. Reeder. In the evening there will be a parish reception to which notables of the church, former rectors, and members of this and neighboring parishes have been invited.

During the past two weeks a new memorial reredos has been erected by the family of the late Horace G. Reeder. The entire interior of the south end of the church has been paneled in colonial style and a very handsome reredos installed against the wall at the rear of the altar and reaching nearly to the ceiling. This handsome memorial is a copy of the masterpiece by Del Robio in a French cathedral and the only one in United States.

A marble date stone reading, "Founded 1832" formerly over the entrance doorway but covered by the wooden tower in 1855 and recovered in 1904 by the present brick tower has again been placed over the entrance door. Above this also has been restored the old colonial fan louvre which was built upon this stone when the church was first erected.

New three-paneled doors with brass locks have been hung to conform with the colonial lines. These doorway restorations have been made by Mrs. J. Herman Barnsley as a memorial to her late husband.

Another handsome improvement to the church was the building of a new sacristy by Mrs. Harry M. Crookshank and children, of London, England, as a memorial to her father, Major Sam.

HE WHO LAUGHS LAST LAUGHS BEST

(By "The Stroller")

No sooner had the Courier been on the street yesterday afternoon than C. H. Bunting called and asked for the "Stroller."

"You had a nice story in the paper today about me but you didn't get it all," said Mr. Bunting, whose jovial voice was quickly recognized.

Continuing he said: "When we went to get the empty box in Philadelphia the man in charge of the shipping department told us which box to take. When we started to move it, I said: 'This one has a piano in it.'"

"No, it hasn't," he said. "If that box has a piano in it, you can bring it back," he insisted.

"We loaded the box and brought it to Bristol and then found that it did have a piano in it. We hauled it back and got $10 for the job," concluded Mr. Bunting.

So, he who laughs last, laughs best.

The victims were: James Pertin, 33, and his brother Steve, 28, of Romulus, and Edward Gardner, 16, and Harold Wilson, 15, sons of Romulus township farmers. Although there were no witnesses to the accident, police believe a tire blew out on the car occupied by the two boys and sent it careening into the path of the Pertin machine.

CLAIMS HE WITNESSED MURDER

Salina Island, Calif., Oct. 15.—Authorities here placed little credit on his story that he witnessed the shooting of Arnold Rothstein, New York gambler, in 1920, but H. L. Kaley, 22-year-old Los Angeles forger was being held here today by Sheriff Calvin H. Abbott.

"He's batty," the Sheriff said. "However, I am going to hold him until a set of questions arrive from New York authorities. I'll put the questions to Kaley and if the New York police don't want him, then I'll let him go free."

Kaley, a run runner and army deserter, startled authorities with his assertion, "I'm sure I saw Fred Malone, a New York gunman, put a slug in Rothstein."

NAMES ATTACKER

Connellsville, Oct. 15.—Although 9-year-old Billy Tressler has named the man who battered his head in the "hatchet killing" that took the lives of his sister Sadie, 11; his mother, Mrs. Nellie Tressler, 28, and his grandmother, Mrs. Amanda Harden, 62; police today pinned hopes of solving the triple murder on his complete recovery.

Fred Frame Under Arrest For Driving Car; No Plates

Fred Frame, winner of the Indianapolis Speedway Classic in 1931 and national champion in 1932, who makes his home in Trenton, was arrested by Highway Patrolman Joseph Hohlfelder yesterday on the Lincoln Highway, near Morrisville, for driving his racing car without registration plates.

For the past week, Frame had been carrying on tests at the Langhorne Speedway. Police say the racing car was carried on a truck daily to the other side of Morrisville, where it was run down to the highway and taken to the race track under its own power. It is understood that the racing machine followed directly behind its carrier, but residents along the road complained and an investigation was ordered.

Frame was taken to the office of Justice of the Peace Joseph A. Keatner, in South Langhorne, but the official was not at home, and the racing driver was ordered to return today for a hearing.

JURY OF VIEW HEARS LAND VALUE EVIDENCE

Takes Testimony to Fix Damages On the Miller Property

TAKEN BY RAILROAD

Estimates of damages done to the property of Alfred J. and Richard Miller, along the P. R. R. above Tullytown, due to a strip of land measuring 93/100th of an acre being taken by the Trenton & Philadelphia Railroad Company, ranged from $2,750 to $500 as given by real estate men before a jury of view here yesterday.

The highest estimate of $2,750 was given by Hugh B. Eastburn, Bristol real estate broker. Eastburn was a witness called by the owners of the property. The lowest estimate was given by George W. Burgner, Morrisville real estate agent. Burgner placed the damage done to the property by the taking of the triangular strip at $500. In between these estimates was that of Francis J. Byers, Bristol real estate broker, who placed the figure at $550. Both Burgner and Byers were witnesses called by the Philadelphia & Trenton Railroad Company.

The hearing was held in the municipal building here before a jury of view composed of Charles A. Ermentrout, Ulysses G. Loux and George W. Jenks. Senator Clarence J. Buckman represented the Trenton and Philadelphia Railroad Company, and Edward Biester represented the owners of the property.

Hugh B. Eastburn was the first witness questioned, and after qualifying as being competent to appraise real estate values Mr. Eastburn placed the damage done to the 12-acre property at $2,750. He explained that he arrived

FIREMEN GIVEN RUN

Failure of the recording machine connected with the fire alarm system to properly register the number of the box from which the alarm was struck, yesterday afternoon gave the Consolidated Fire Department a ride to various sections of Bristol. The recording machine registered the number correctly the last time out of five, but by the time the fifth record had been punched the firemen had left the house and gone to the first number indicated. The first number registered was 13 when it should have been 34. Various other numbers were recorded the other three times. An automobile owned by Mr. Streep caught fire on Garfield street.

THIRD ARREST IS MADE, CONNECTION WITH HOLD-UPS

Adolph Ozga, 21, Philadelphia, Taken Into Custody

TAKE OTHERS TO JAIL

Kuarterman and Bush Make Admissions and Implicate Ozga

Another arrest has been made in connection with the hold-ups at the Argonne Inn, Warminster Township, and the roadhouse of William Snyder, Croydon. The third arrest was made in Philadelphia last night when Adolph Ozga, 21, 3370 Salmon street, was taken into custody after midnight. The arrest was made by Detective Russo and State Police.

William Kuarterman, 32, 5237 Mercer street, and Stephan Bush, 28, 3114 Richmond street, Philadelphia, who were held without bail after being identified as having participated in the two hold-ups, were taken to the Bucks County jail at Doylestown yesterday.

Both men appeared to be pleased with their arrest but resented the fact that Constable Crawford handcuffed them. They were assured that if the automobile should have a flat tire, they would not have to assist in changing it.

Both Kuarterman and Bush made a statement yesterday in which they admitted everything in connection with the two hold-ups. They also implicated Ozga and it was upon this information that Ozga was brought to Bristol early this morning.

County Detective Russo, Constable Crawford and State Police from Morrisville and Doylestown grilled Kuarterman and Bush since Wednesday noon but it was difficult to get statements from them. Finally the officers presented such a strong case against the pair and brought in over a dozen persons who identified them, that they finally "broke" and told the story.

They had at first used the beer runner story as a method of throwing the officers off the trail but it was not successful. In their first statements they had given names of well known racketeers and in checking up this list, it was discovered that some of the men had been "knocked off" a long time ago.

at the figure in this manner, using sales prices of adjacent farms in or about 1930, as a basis. He gave the estimate of the property before the narrow triangular strip of land was taken at $10,800, and the value after the strip was taken at $8,050. He valued three swamp maple trees and two Norway maples at $250, the 33/100th of an acre of land taken at $500. He estimated the damage to the two and half story frame dwelling at $2,000, saying it would have to be moved elsewhere on the property, new cellar dug and the present cellar filled in.

The property is assessed at $1700. Alfred J. Miller, one of the owners of the property told details as to how he came into possession of the property and stated that he rents it for $100 annually.

George W. Burgner, Morrisville real estate agent, placed the value before 1930 at $2,600 and after the strip had been taken from the property by the railroad company at $2,100.

Francis J. Byers, Bristol real estate broker, valued the five trees at $150, house, $300 and ground taken at $100.

The jury will announce its award later.

Icebergs Floating On Berg Lake Furnish Unusual Scene

first two hours we started up the side of a steep winding mountain. After a climb, which seemed never-ending, we looked down the valley far below to sight a bull moose and his mate only a little farther on than we had made our turn to ascend. We parleyed some time as to whether it would pay us, to go down again after His Nibs. All that climb and back again! Well, it's one of the hardships of the hunt; and we decided to leave them in peace and quietness, and passed on over rises and falls of nothing but rocks sometimes. We came to a lake in a basin on the very top of the mountain, with only here and there in the distance other mountain peaks extending up but a little above us. Even Mount Robson itself, with an altitude of 12,987 feet, the highest peak in the Canadian Rockies, seemed to point but a little above us. As we crossed the last range and looked down far below at our journey-end camp site, we saw a grass-carpeted meadow basin, a quiet lake at the head to the west, studded on the north by a high rocky cliff, fringed on the east and south by groups of fir and balsams, and a pure, clear mountain stream rambling along within two jumps of the camp site. And there was a young cow caribou awaiting us, but it was soon off and away. Such scenes make one wonder at nature's retreats where one can enjoy the call of beauty, peace and quietness.

That evening after a look around, the guide and the horse wrangler who had been pitching camp and preparing for the evening meal informed me I had just missed a lady caller, as a lady caribou had come over the knoll out of the firs, almost into camp before she found someone had taken possession—then galloped away to parts unknown.

Our first day's hunt starting for the mountain wild-berry patch for a chance bear seemed to show but little game until after quite a long jaunt down the mountainside to the valley and along a bouldered stream. The guide finally sighted a movement far ahead up the mountain near a clump of firs. After quite some searching with his field glasses he called it a big bear, probably a grizzly. After quite some crawling and stalking to keep out of sight, for the way was up and over a rocky climb with the rocks covered by a growth of shrubbery so that one could not see if one was stepping on a rock or between two rocks, we worked our way to a point farther away than we thought he was, and came suddenly upon His Nibs within rifle range. He had probably not seen, scented or heard us until we came so close. As on some previous occasion, my first shot was a miss, or at least it showed no effects. But the second rolled him over. But he wasn't down long before he got up and walked away as best he could, not making up the mountain, but down below the stream, and was half hidden as he walked. He travelled almost as fast as we could, but when we came to a ledge of rock several hundred feet away and looked down we saw him lying against a log about all in. Only a pellet or two to finish him—a large black bear probably 350 to 400 pounds. This was my first kill of a bear as well as the first bear I had ever shot at. Some hunters count so much on getting a bear, especially a grizzly; and some count high, expecting to get a grizzly on their first big game hunt. It is good luck if they do. I was told by a reliable outfitter and guide about an experienced big game hunter who, counting several different years, had hunted all told 180 days for grizzlies and had never as yet seen a live one in the woods or mountains, let alone killing one.

October 12, 1932.

Mr. Maxwell J. Gordon,
Advertising Manager,
Courier, Bristol, Pa.

Dear Mr. Gordon:

When a newspaper does a commendable advertising job, we feel it is entitled to something over and above a perfunctory note of thanks. This is the reason for this letter, as your publication made a major contribution toward Frigidaire Corporation's spectacular success during the month of September.

Ordinarily September sales in the electric refrigeration industry run about 10 per cent under those of August, owing to the seasonal trend of the business.

Despite this precedent, which has prevailed over a long period of years, Frigidaire's household unit sales in September ran 43 per cent above those in August.

There were three contributing factors to this spectacular accomplishment, as we view the matter.

First, we offered a reputable product built by an established manufacturer and priced attractively.

Next, we supported this product with good advertising copy—some of the best we have ever run, we have been told.

Third, we placed this advertising in a carefully selected list of newspapers to get the maximum coverage in the field we wanted to reach at the lowest possible cost. Your publication was among those chosen.

In this particular campaign, we desired to place before the public a new achievement in refrigerator construction that makes possible one-fourth more food storage space within the same sized cabinet. The engineering development was new. We wanted to dramatize it while it was news. The advantage of quick coverage through newspaper display was evident.

Needless to say our advertising was backed up with sound and aggressive sales effort by our organization, but the fact that a 43 per cent increase was registered at a time when a marked decrease was the natural expectation proves newspaper advertising is essential to merchandising success.

Very truly yours,

H. W. NEWELL,

Vice-President,
In Charge of Sales.

Daphne by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

CHAPTER XXXV.

BUT Daphne had gone, and though Mrs. Halliday and Mrs. Spellman listened for fifteen minutes, ears glued to cracks, Flora didn't say another word, and you couldn't tell whether the little Haines girl was going to listen to reason or not.

For three hours she had been nerving herself to it, trying different ways of saying it, over in her mind. "I saw Crystal the other day!"—but that was a queer way to start—and "I wonder where Crystal is now," was just as funny, and it wasn't true either.

"You're awfully quiet tonight!" he laughed, and she blushed, and said "Am I?" and couldn't think of anything else to say, and they drove on, still silently. They'd soon be home now, and she'd have to hurry, if it were ever to be said. "You know I get awfully sick of taxiing you around this way," he said, still bantering. "Just like a couple of homeless bums. Not even a kitchen to hold hands in. Not even—"

"You mean . . . you don't like to take me riding?"

"Of course I like to take you riding, but hang it, I like to park once in a while when I'm with a pretty girl—"

A pretty girl! Was that all she was to him, a pretty girl? Was that what Flora meant? She gulped. "We don't ride all the time. We do park sometimes—"

He stopped the car, and kissed her, laughing all the while. "You'll be the death of me yet? When are you going to grow up? Never mind, that's one of the reasons I'm so crazy about you. I am crazy about you. Do you know that, Daphne?"

But for once she didn't thrill to his nearness, her heart was too heavy. Pretty girl . . . parking . . . petting . . . Crystal . . . All the troubled thoughts shifted and darted about, forming kaleidoscope patterns of misery in her mind. . . . He meant it wasn't any fun coming to her house to call for her, and driving aimlessly around. . . . He didn't have to taxi Crystal around, Crystal had a place to bring him, a place.

"I'm sorry I haven't a wonderful place like Crystal!" she burst out bitterly, and could have bitten her tongue. Thinking about it all evening, and then saying it that way! But he didn't notice the bitterness. "Pretty nice, all right," he agreed warmly. "I like a place like that, it's kind of homey with all those nice comfortable chairs. That's what I said the first time I saw it. None of those antique effects for me. . . . say—I didn't know your two kids had gotten together! What do you know about that?"

"You haven't? Then how did you—I mean how did you know all about her place? I thought it was funny she didn't say anything about meeting you. You know how Crystal is, right out with everything—no holding anything back—

"You didn't say anything either!" she said accusingly. "You never told me you were seeing her all the time. I—I just happened to find out, that's all!"

In the flash of a street lamp he saw her tense white face, and thought with amusement, "The kid's jealous!" So he said, humoring her, "You told me not to tell the folks you were in town, so I haven't said a word. Well—naturally—I kept Crystal's little secret, too. She's here at art school, pretty near killing herself. They work 'em like dogs there, and it's a shame, too. Night and day. It isn't right. You know she isn't strong either."

Crystal not strong! Daphne fought a wild desire to laugh. But he was well started on his subject now. "I wish you'd let me tell her you're here. She's lonely I think, and nervous. You know how keen she is on that art of hers. And then her mother . . . you don't mind if I knock the old lady a little, Daphne?"

"I don't like her, either," Daphne said honestly.

"Well, it seems that the old lady keeps writing Crystal all the time, telling her how hard up they are—"

"Hard up!"

"Yes, short of money. I didn't believe it at first, but I ran into a fellow at the bank the other day who was talking about some orchard land in that district. Seems that your father has borrowed a lot on it. I don't want to alarm you, Daphne, but from what I hear he's going to lose the property. Say, what's wrong with him, anyway? When I was a kid people used to hold him up as an example of thrift—Abner Haines who had three cents out of the first nickel he ever made, and then all of a sudden he kind of went haywire—began spending money like a drunken sailor—"

"He spent it on my stepmother," Daphne said hotly, "she never gave him a minute's peace, she was right after him every minute, she—oh well—no use talking about it!" She stopped, frightened at what she had almost said about Crystal. . . . you can't tell things like that, and still if you don't—

"You don't know what it was like in our house!" she finished desperately, fighting temptation to say something about Crystal, some little word that would make him see, if he had any sense. . . . She searched his face in the dim light. He must see, surely he must see that the money was spent on Crystal, that she was like her mother, heartless, cruel. . . .

Ralph was speaking, "You bet I do know what you poor kids had to put up with. Crystal told me often enough. Gee it must have been a cat and dog life. You were lucky you had her to look out for you."

Lucky to have Crystal! Crystal who made all the trouble, who stole her Paisley shawl, who was the reason for the big loans on the orchards. . . . "Oh!" she said. A funny, choked "Oh!"—and that was all.

Just before they parted at Mrs. Hinkle's door he said, "And you won't let me tell Crystal where you are?"

"No. Not—not yet—"

"Daphne Haines, do you mean you haven't written home yet? Your own father doesn't know where you are?" He was looking at her accusingly. Fine daughter, you are, he seemed to say. "They don't care—"

"Don't care!" Oh come now, Daphne, that's childish. Of course they care. You ought to be ashamed of making them worry, you ought really. Write to them, that's a good kid—will you?"

Two big tears gathered in her eyes. The utter hopelessness of it, of ever making him understand, overwhelmed her. Instead of saving him from Crystal, she had let him think she needed to be saved from her own selfishness!

"Go on—write to your old dad. I wish to God mine was still alive to write to. I wouldn't be in the pickle I am today—"

"What pickle, Ralph?" her arms went out to him—"tell me!"

"Oh—nothing. Just general, I mean." He shook his powerful shoulders, as if to shake the troubled thoughts away. "Well—are you going to do as I say?"

She hesitated. What did it matter? "All right," she agreed listlessly. "I'll write. But don't tell Crystal yet. Promise?"

He promised, bid her a hasty, teasing goodbye, and bounded down the rickety steps two at a time feeling better than he had for days. Pretty nice to bring a girl and her father together again. He'd have the two girls crying in each other's arms next. . . . But though the picture of the two sisters with their arms entwined appealed to him he couldn't quite see Daphne in the role.

"She's a hard, independent little thing," he thought, and a shade of disapproval crossed his handsome face. "Crystal's so different. Of course, they really aren't sisters at all. Well—I guess there aren't many like Crystal—all heart, and no head. . . . poor little thing working herself to death to become a great artist, and save the family fortunes!"

He parked the car, turned out the lights, and went leisurely to the comfortable apartment, and bed.

And in Mrs. Hinkle's back parlor, with the brown walls, and the faded green carpet, and the old Turkey-red couch, Daphne sat at her little table, trying to keep her promise, and write. "Dear Father," she wrote, in her neat, schoolgirl hand. . . . dear father . . . She dropped her aching head on the table, and cried.

FIRST HOME GAME IS ARRANGED BY ST. ANN'S

(By T. M. Juno)

After having played their first two games on foreign fields, the St. Ann's A. A. football eleven will play their first home game of the season on Sullivan's field tomorrow afternoon, clashing with the strong Rising Sun Bulldogs of Philadelphia.

The "Saints" dropped their opening contests, losing the first to Cheltenham, 7-0, and the second to Tacony, 8-6. In both frays the Bristol club outplayed the winners and should have walked away with the games on their victory ledger. The strength of the locals can be based on the fact that last week Cheltenham defeated the strong Ambler team, 37-0.

The Purple and Gold are anxious to redeem themselves to their followers and showed fine spirit and pep during the practices held this week.

Coach Pico gave his backfield plenty of extra work during the sessions as some blame can be placed on the fact that the backfield men were taking out the wrong players and failing to give the ball carriers enough interference.

The line of the eleven has been doing splendid work and will be strengthened by the return of "Freddie" Lasprella, "Shine" Gillard and "Moosie" Seneca. These three players were absent last week. "Eddie" Tosti, backfield ace, who was injured in the Cheltenham game, is still on the sidelines and will not see action.

During the week the "Saints" held a meeting and elected Raymond Pico, last year's captain of the Bristol High School, as their 1932 captain. Pico is calling the signals for the team.

The Bulldogs have a strong club and are having a successful season. After winning their opening games, the eleven met defeat at the hands of the St. Matthews C. C. on Tuesday in a night game.

The price of admission to the games has been cut in half and a large crowd is expected to be on hand on the opening kick-off at 2.30 p. m.

NEW TYPE OF ACTION PROMISED AT EDDINGTON

A new type of action and perhaps a much better football team will be seen on Eddington field tomorrow afternoon at 2.30 o'clock when Croydon meets Beaumont A. C. in a scheduled scrimmage. The new action comes from a full week of strenuous and educational practice under the guiding hand of Coach Henry Morgan.

It was also announced that several new players will be seen on the field although their names were not divulged. It was said that one of them was a former Bensalem High School star and backfield man while another starred at Bristol High several years ago as an end.

The Croydon squad is fast approaching the limit as new candidates appear for tryouts. They now boast a squad of 28 players.

The game on Sunday promises to be filled with thrills and spills since the visiting Beaumont team has gained a name for strength and supremacy in South Philadelphia.

Coach Morgan, in a stirring and enthusiastic talk at the club rooms last night urged the boys to go in and fight. He said that the aim of the team is "an undefeated eleven for the season."

Croydon has made a good start for the goal since it has won both of its starts this season.

All players are looking forward to a tough game which will take place in two weeks when the blue and gold jerseys will meet the strong Olney Aces, last year champions of Northeast Philadelphia Sandlot teams. The game will take place at the same field and the same time.

The rest of the season will be a real battle for the local team according to Nat Vincent, game booker. In his schedule he has placed teams such as Holmesburg Vagabonds, Milo of Roxborough, Germantown and many other of Philadelphia's strong elevens.

Real football is being produced every Sunday at Eddington field and large crowds are attending the frays.

BRISTOL ELEVEN LOSES TO ATLANTIC CITY TEAM

The aggregation of Bristol football players who last night journeyed to Atlantic City to play in the Convention Hall at the seaside resort, lost to the New Jersey eleven by the score of 31 to 0. The game was played indoors.

The Bristol team proved no match for the Atlantic City boys. The New Jersey team played under the name of the Sylvania team.

The game was featured by the playing of Izzy Mysel, Arol Aigner, Dody Cicero.

THREE LOCALITES MAKE GOOD WITH OVERBROOK

The three Bristol boys who tried out for the Overbrook White Jackets football team have made good, according to an announcement made by Tex Hamer, coach, and Joe Meiman, manager. The locals are: Matt Hutchinson, "Socks" Seneca, and "Doc" Dougherty.

The White Jackets squad of players has been cut down to eighteen and the names of the resident boys are still on the list, meaning that they will be kept all season.

Stars to Shine in Eastern Grid Battles This Week

Here are some of the grid stars who will perform when the Eastern football season gets fully under way this Saturday with several important clashes between major teams. Army takes on Pittsburgh at West Point, Dartmouth and Penn meet at Philadelphia. Harvard clashes with Penn State at Cambridge and Cornell meets Princeton in their annual battle at Princeton. Pitt upset the Cadets last year 28-0 and figures to do likewise in Saturday's session. Dartmouth and U. of P. meet for the first time as do Harvard and Penn State.

Coach Hamer was well pleased with the showing of the Bristol boys and started them in the contests at Passaic, Washington, and Rochester. This week the boys will again start a fray, the game being at Coaldale. The Overbrook team is after its fourth victory of the season.

"Doc" Dougherty, former Bristol A. A. halfback, has entered professional football with a bang, and is proving to be a sensation wherever the White Jackets play.

FOOTBALL GAME

On Sullivan's field, Sunday morning the Penn A. C. will meet the White Elephants. The Pennacs dropped their first contest of the year last Sunday and are out to redeem themselves. The White Elephants also have lost their opening game and are in top shape for this contest.

St. Luke's, Newtown, Has An Anniversary

uel Comfort. It was consecrated by Bishop Garland in 1929.

During the past summer the church buildings have been redecored inside and out. St. Luke's Altar Guild has been active in making new vestments and altar hangings. A processional banner of pinpoint made by Miss Bessie Crookshank was presented to the parish last year and Mrs. H. W. Carey presented credence table linen.

The pews are the same that were originally placed in the church except where the organ now is, there was a large square pew occupied by Dr. Phineas Jenks one of those most prominently active in the establishment of the parish and church.

There was no chance originally and the pulpit was one of the old style high pulpits with winding stairs. Some time after 1836 this pulpit was built with steps into it from the present sacristy. The present brass pulpit was erected by the late J. Herman Barnsley, in memory of his mother.

The present railing around the altar together with the font were placed several years ago in memory of Eliza W. Eyre.

The present altar was erected by members of St. Stephen's Church, Boston, in memory of Rev. Henry M. Torbert, rector of their church, and a former resident of Newtown.

This old church has an interesting history. In 1766 an effort to build an Episcopal Church in Newtown had been made with the assistance of the church wardens at Bristol. However, probably because of the unsettled conditions due to the approaching War of the Revolution, the attempt was unsuccessful.

About 65 years later it appears from what records are available, subscriptions were solicited to erect an edifice and these efforts were sanctioned by Bishop White of the Diocese of Pennsylvania.

The lot on Washington avenue was conveyed from James Phillips and wife, on September 26, 1834, for $240 and the deed filed states that a "brick church called St. Luke's has been erected." Title was vested in Dr. Phineas Jenks, James Worth and William Paff and by them in March, 1836, after the incorporation, transferred to "The rector, church wardens and vestrymen of St. Luke's Church in the County of Bucks."

Stars of the Big Ten

By HARDIN BURNLEY

It is the usual lot of a great football player to reach national fame only in his senior year. His star flashes over the horizon for a few brief weeks—then fades forever. One out of fifty is heard from later for conspicuous ability in some other field.

As this season started, however, there were left three names which one could place out of the bibliography of the 1931 gridiron campaign.

Orv Mohler of the Southern California Trojans, Don Zimmerman of Tulane, Pug Rentner of Northwestern.

Where is the football fan who cannot recite at some length the virtues of these warriors on the striped turf?

Yet instead of having passed into oblivion last fall, these pieces of human dynamite are back again—and if we may judge from early season accounts—bigger and better than ever, if possible.

Orv Mohler is the 23-year-old youngster who is so good in an open field (cluttered only with eleven men of the opposition trying to bring him down) that Howard Jones, his coach, says there has never been his equal.

Don Zimmerman is the Tulane triple-threat who cut such a swath through eastern and southern football last year. He was unpredictable, his play was apparently incapable of analysis. He is back again to pester Tulane's opponents.

And—Notre Dame please note—Pug Rentner is lugging the pigskin again for Northwestern. The Big Ten has had quite enough of this fellow, but the only consolation is that he's a fairly bright boy who will graduate with his class. He won't be back again.

Any one of these three outstanding stars would be entitled, any time, to comment on the rules of the game in which they excel. Recently Mohler, mightiest of the Trojans, was talking about the new dead ball rule.

"It's a noble experiment," he smiled. "No, of course it won't succeed in its purpose, and it will rob the game of many thrills.

"If a man is going to get hurt he will be hurt in spite of anything the rules can do about it. You cannot prescribe against accidents and football injuries are accidents in a strict sense of the word.

"Personally I would prefer to take my chances and I believe that I am voicing the sentiments of a majority of players.

"Certainly I believe the rule will handicap me as it will any player who depends upon shiftness rather than sheer power for yardage."
